

Court of Common Pleas Judge to Speak at Harvard Law School

Judge Andrea Rocanelli, a judge in the Court of Common Pleas for the State of Delaware, has been invited to speak at Harvard Law School on October 17, 2011 as part of Harvard Law's 1L Speaker Series. Her visit to the law school is sponsored in part by the Office of Public Interest Advising. In addition to addressing a group of 100-150 law students in a more formal setting, Judge Rocanelli will be meeting with representatives from the Jamaica Plain Legal Services Center and the Women's Law Association.

Harvard Law School is very interested in the Delaware Court of Common Pleas and the work the Court is doing. The title of Judge Rocanelli's talk in the 1L Speaker Series is "On the Frontlines of Justice: Delaware Judge Andrea Rocanelli (HLS '89) discusses Court-centered access to justice, as well as her career in public service."

The law school is especially interested in the Court of Common Pleas' initiative with respect to credit card debt collection actions, as well its efforts at rehabilitative justice, including in the specialty courts and trauma-informed probation services.

For further information, please contact
Carole B. Kirshner, Court Administrator, at 302-255-0870